OUR VISITORS

Tonight we welcome to Watersheddings the triumphant New Zealand tourists who, eleven days ago, became the first all Kiwi side to win a test match series in this country. The first ever tourists of 1907-8 actually won the test series but they included Dally Messenger, an Australian, in their test line-up and so, strictly speaking those pioneer tourists would be classed as an Australasian combination. However, the tourists must be congratulated on their excellent test form.

Throughout the years there have been many outstanding personalities from New Zealand associated with the British Rugby League but perhaps the most famous is the legendary Lance Todd. He toured England in 1907-8 and stayed behind to play for Wigan before becoming the manager of the outstanding pre-war Salford team. He was killed in a road accident on November 14th, 1942, whilst returning from a match here at Watersheddings. The Lance Todd Trophy award at Wembley takes its name from this talented administrator who had strong views about the re-organisation of the game. It would be interesting to hear his views about the televising of matches. Other famous players who spring to mind are Joe Phillips (661 goals for Bradford between 1950-56), Peter Henderson (214 tries for Huddersfield), and Ces Mountford (Wigan), regarded by many as the greatest stand-off of all time.

Although the 1971 Kiwis have suffered several embarrassing defeats in club fixtures the form displayed at Barrow and especially Wigan was most pleasing. In the first test at Salford the New Zealanders turned an 8-0 deficit into an 18-13 victory and then repeated the feat at Castleford in the second test where the 17-14 victory came after trailing 11-0. One very disappointing aspect of this tour is the atrocious attendance figures. Both test matches drew less than 4,000 which is a poor reflection on the state of the game today. The largest crowd of the tour so far is the 12,252 at Wigan. This will be the eighth occasion on which the Kiwis have visited Watersheddings for a club match and of the previous seven visits the Kiwis have won only two. In 1907-8 Oldham won 8-7 and on completion of the tour George Smith, the Kiwis test centre, decided to stay on and play for Oldham. It was Smith's second visit to Britain for he came over with the 1905 All Blacks rugby union tourists. He made 18 appearances on his rugby union trip and scored 19 tries including 2 tries in New Zealand's victory over Scotland. Smith stayed with Oldham for eight seasons before a broken leg, sustained in a match against Rochdale Hornets, ended his career. Whilst with Oldham he played in three Championship Finals and one Cup Final. The tour of 1926-7 is remembered because of the strike by several of the Kiwis who were later suspended sine die and amidst this background of controversy Oldham won 15-10. The 1947-8 tourists were quite successful and only narrowly lost the test series. They also proved too strong for Oldham who they beat 18-8. The clash between Oldham and the 1951 tourists was most exciting, with Oldham just hanging on to a 21-18 win but in 1955 Oldham were well on the way to building their most successful side and they comfortably defeated New Zealand. During the 1961 tour a combined Oldham/Rochdale Hornets side met New Zealand and after a tough game the tourists were beaten 10-8, all the points coming from penalty goals. When New Zealand last visited Oldham, on the 31st August 1965, they ran out narrow winners 5-2, and no doubt they will be out to score another victory tonight.

The New Zealanders have always been welcome here at Watersheddings but the 1971 tourists, with the Ashes already tucked under their belts, are assured of a fine reception and the fans, no doubt, will be rewarded for their attendance by an attractive, sporting game.

PLEASE NOTE

Tonight's game will be played under Rugby League rules varying from those of a normal league game. The variations which have been agreed at International Board level are as follows :-

1. The Drop Goal. The drop goal will only count as one point.
2. The Feeding of the Scrum. The New Zealanders have no objection to our continuing the practice of lobbing the ball gently into the scrum or the International Rule being observed whereby their players be allowed to put the ball in with a downward motion or roll it along the ground.
3. Substitutes. In the games against New Zealand two substitutes can be used at any time, but the players substituted will not be able to return to the field of play.
